DIVERSIONARY TACTICS

The Gensol saga is the latest in a list of corporate cases where promoters redirected funds at will and whim. It's yet another wakeup call

KHUSHBOO TIWARI & SAMIE MODAK
Mumbai, 24 April

Earlier this month, the Securities and Exchange Board of India (Sebi) dropped a bombshell on Gensol Engineering. It barred promoters Anmol Singh Jaggi and Puneet Singh Jaggi from both the securities markets and directorial roles. The charge was that they had allegedly diverted a loan of over ₹262 crore meant for procuring 6,400 electric vehicles (EVs) to buy luxury real estate, including a ₹43 crore apartment in The Camellias, DLF's ultra-luxury project at Gurugram, and for personal expenses such as international travel and credit card bills.

Sebi's interim order painted a damning picture: The Jaggi brothers had treated the listed company as their "personal piggy bank," routing funds through shell entities and submitting forged documents to mask loan defaults. The stock plummeted, hitting lower circuits and leaving 100,000 retail investors stranded.

This is not an isolated incident. In 2019, Religare Enterprises faced a similar scandal when the Enforcement Directorate uncovered a ₹400 million diversion by former promoters, Malvinder and Shivinder Singh. Funds from Religare's subsidiary were allegedly funnelled through a Mauritius-based entity to a company based in tax haven Jersey, allegedly for the promoters' benefit. The Singh brothers' stake dwindled to 0.88 per cent by 2020, yet legal battles continue,

Shriram Subramanian, founder of InGovern Research, said there may be other cases similar to Gensol's, which have yet to be uncovered with Sebi demanding fines and disengagement.

Ze Entertainment Enterprises, too, has been embroiled in a fund diversion case since 2023. Sebi accused promoters Subhash Chandra and Punit Goenka of siphoning off ₹200 crore through layered transactions involving 13 entities, some linked to the earlier Shrirup Gold Refinery fraud. The case drags on, with no resolution in sight.

Other high-profile cases mirror this pattern. DHFL's (formerly Dewan Housing Finance Corporation Ltd) promoters allegedly diverted ₹29,000 crore through 66 entities with minimal assets, triggering one of India's biggest financial frauds.

Infrastructure Leasing & Financial Services Ltd's (IL&FS) collapse in 2018 exposed a ₹91,000 crore debt pile, where funds were misused to prop up group companies, leaving investors and lenders in the lurch.

Instances of fund misuse are more pronounced among small and medium enterprises (SMEs), where rules are less stringent than for mainboard companies, but they don't get as much attention.

Some recent cases include Varanium Cloud, where funds raised through its IPO were allegedly diverted to other entities; SeeUR Credentials, where funds were diverted to promoters and directors, including independent directors; and Add Shop E-Retail, where financials were manipulated to present a rosier picture.

These cases not only erode investor wealth but also undermine confidence in India's $5 trillion market ecosystem.

Unmasking corporate greed
Akshat Pande, managing partner at law firm Alpha Partners, argues that the issue lies not in the absence of regulations but in their delayed enforcement and lax due diligence by lenders.

"Questions should be asked about what due diligence was done by Indian Renewable Energy Development Agency (Ireda) and Power Finance Corporation (PFC) while granting loans to Gensol," he says.

Gensol had availed of a ₹978 crore term loan from state-owned lenders Ireda and PFC. Of this, ₹661 crore was for buying 6,400 EVs, which were to be subsequently leased to BluSmart. However, the company had bought only 4,700 EVs for ₹567 crore.

Pande calls for concerted legal action by lending agencies and suo moto intervention by the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) to probe lending irregularities.

He, however, warns against overly intrusive regulations that could stifle genuine businesses, advocating instead for strict punishment for the guilty. "The system is robust if followed in letter and spirit," he says.

Parag Srivastava, partner at Bombay Law Chambers, highlights the complexity of detecting fund diversions.

"Sebi's action in Gensol followed a complaint in June 2024 and a detailed investigation involving multiple entities and physical verifications," he explains. The delay, he argues, stems from the intricate nature of these schemes, not regulatory loopholes.

To prevent such cases, Srivastava suggests mandatory disclosures of fund utilisation, stronger whistleblower mechanisms, and artificial intelligence (AI)-driven data analysis to flag suspicious transactions. He also proposes strengthening the Investor Protection Fund (IPF) to compensate affected shareholders, and limiting prolonged litigation by streamlining appeals.

Shiju PV, senior partner at IndiaLaw, New Delhi, takes a broader view, attributing fund diversions to systemic failures across audits, lending practices, corporate governance, and regulatory oversight.

"Auditors lack forensic expertise, lenders disburse loans without robust monitoring, and boards fail in their fiduciary duties," he says.

He points to dual-regulated entities like Religare, which slip through cracks due to fragmented oversight by Sebi and RBI. To address this, Shiju advocates mandatory forensic audits, real-time loan monitoring, stricter accountability for auditors and directors, and enhanced inter-regulatory coordination.

"Swift enforcement and deterrent penalties are essential to break the culture of impunity," he asserts.

Investors' plight
For investors, these scandals are a nightmare.

as Gensol's crash and often hit lower circuits for days, leaving shareholders trapped. In Zee's case, too, its stock came crashing down, hurting several retail and institutional investors such as mutual funds.

"They may be other cases similar to Gensol's, which have yet to be uncovered," says Shriram Subramanian, founder of InGovern Research, a Bengaluru-headquartered voting recommendation and governance firm. "Investors, both institutional and venture capital firms, need to be vigilant. They should actively look for indicators that raise concerns, and conduct thorough research. This due diligence can help build confidence among retail investors."

Prolonged litigation, as seen in Zee and Religare, further erodes investor confidence, with settlements often leaving shareholders shortchanged. Srivastava suggests temporary trading halts or class-action lawsuits to empower investors, while Pande stresses that post-facto litigation yields little. He instead urges preventive due diligence by lenders.

The experts agree on one thing:

Prevention is better than cure. Strengthening forensic audits, enhancing whistleblower protections, and using AI for real-time transaction monitoring could catch diversions early. Lenders must prioritise due diligence and end-use monitoring, while regulators like Sebi and RBI need to collaborate to plug oversight gaps.

Swift enforcement, as Shiju emphasises, is critical to deter future frauds. For investors, an empowered Investor Protection Fund and streamlined legal recourse could mitigate losses.

India is the world's fifth-largest stock market, so restoring trust in it is paramount. Scandals such as these serve as a wakeup call. Without systemic reforms, the cycle of corporate greed will continue, leaving investors to suffer the consequences of promoter excesses.
